Redesign a Real Workday Around Claude — Submission Template

Scenario reminder (fictional): Theo, a solo marketing consultant, has four Thursday tasks (summarise a 30-page report, draft 3 client social posts, reconcile invoices, answer one quick question) — all done through a chatbot.

Part A — Diagnose the Overhang

Theo's task	Where the chatbot creates friction
Summarise 30-page report	Theo has to paste the report in chunks, losing continuity between sections, then manually stitch the partial summaries back into one coherent document.
Three social posts for three clients	Theo re-pastes the style guide for each client separately and re-prompts three times, copying each finished post out before starting the next.
Reconcile invoices → income summary	Theo has to type or paste numbers from multiple invoices by hand into chat, then manually rebuild the summary/table from the AI's reply.
Quick synonym question	Minimal friction — a single question with a single answer, well-suited to chat as-is.

Biggest-overhang task (and why)

Drafting three social posts for three clients. The AI could produce all three, correctly styled, in one pass — but the chat interface forces Theo to run it as three separate manual round-trips, re-supplying context each time.

Part B — Redesign With the Right Interfaces

Task	Best interface	Parallel or sequential?	Reason
Summarise 30-page report	Cowork	Parallel (can run alongside other tasks)	It's a self-contained file-processing job Theo can hand off and check back on later.
Three social posts	Cowork	Parallel	One brief covering all three clients' style guides can run as a single agent task while Theo does something else.
Reconcile invoices → summary	Cowork	Sequential / close supervision	Financial data benefits from Theo reviewing the output closely before treating any numbers as final.
Quick synonym question	Claude chat app	Sequential (in-the-moment)	It's a single instant question — chat is faster than spinning up an agent task for it.

Privacy note for the invoice task

Invoices likely contain client names, amounts, and possibly bank/payment details — Theo should confirm whether this data leaves his local files appropriately (e.g., not shared beyond what's needed) and review the agent's output for accuracy before using it in any financial reporting, since reconciliation errors have real monetary consequences.

Part C — Brief Like a Manager

Task to brief: draft three social posts for three clients.

Field	Your answer
Goal	Draft one social post for each of Theo's three clients, each aligned to that client's own brand voice.
Context	Use the attached style guide for each client (tone, do's/don'ts, example posts) and this week's talking points/topic for each; keep posts platform-appropriate for whichever channel each client uses (e.g., LinkedIn vs. Instagram).
Constraints	Each post should be under 150 words, avoid overused buzzwords like "innovative" or "synergy," and include a clear call-to-action relevant to that client's current campaign.
Definition of done	Three separate draft posts, clearly labeled by client, saved as a single reviewable document — ready for Theo to edit and approve before posting, not auto-published.
